"Go on, Deyala. I'll stay here." The Herbal went off. Azver sat down on the rough bench Irian had. "Tell us who you are," the white-haired man said, courteously enough, but without greeting or welcome. "Tell us how you came here." The Doorkeeper nodded once, mild as ever. and in its walls were thin, crimson, crumbling beds of cinnabar... He made no sign. He thought. Another reason he loved her. saw him flying thus they shouted, "The dragonlord! the dragonlord!" "What, to send them back into death?" the Namer said, and the Patterner, "Who is to say what is the law?" said, and, "Knowledge, order, and control." Those words he said so often that they made a tune in. Its owner was one of four men who called themselves Master of Iria. The other three called him Master of Old Iria. He spent his youth and what remained of his inheritance in law courts and the anterooms of the Lords of Way in Shelieth, trying to prove his right to the whole domain as it had been a hundred years ago. He came back unsuccessful and embittered and spent his age drinking the hard red wine from his last vineyard and walking his boundaries with a troop of ill-treated, underfed dogs to keep interlopers off his land. The history of the Fourteen Kings of Havnor (actually six kings and eight queens, ~150-400) is told in the Havnorian Lay. Tracing descent both through the male and the female lines, and intermarrying with various noble houses of the Archipelago, the royal house embraced five principalities: the House of Enlad, the oldest, tracing direct descent from Morred and Serriadh; the Houses of Shelieth, Ea, and Havnor; and lastly the House of Ilien. Prince Gemal Seaborn of Ilien was the first of his house to take the throne in Havnor. His granddaughter was Queen Heru; her son, Maharion (reigned 430-452), was the last king before the Dark Time. The curer checked the girths, eased a strap, and got up in the saddle, not expertly, but the hinny had held him. "Tell Thorion we will meet him on Roke Knoll," he said. "When he comes, we will be. She retreated to the wall. He had turned up on Dulse's doorstep a few years ago. Well, no, twenty years ago it must be, or one against the other in duels and combats of sorcery, careless of the evils they did, or worse. "I can be that, if you insist." But as he fled, he captured her brother Salan, who was sailing. "Would you come back to me?" he said. "Would you go with me, live with me, marry me, Darkrose?" The young man, called Ivory, did not actually have his staff and cloak yet; he explained that he. "I'll bring food," he said, and strode on, quickening his pace so that he vanished soon, though not so abruptly as the Namer, in the light and shadow under the trees. Irian watched till he was certainly gone and then made her way through high grass and weeds to the little house. He said only, "But not among the students." Great House, all the mages, many of the students. Leading them was Thorion the Summoner, tall in. He turned and made for the shore, hasty, careless where he set his feet and not caring if he broke the silence by splashing and breathing hard. He slogged back up the path through the reeds till he reached dry ground and coarse grass, and heard the buzz of midges and crickets. He sat down then on the ground, rather hard, for his legs were shaking. and stopped and undid it word by word. He was sitting a little way from where he lay, looking at himself, although it was still utterly. They jolted on all the next day through a summer thundershower or two and came at dusk to Kembermouth, a walled, prosperous port city. They left the carter to his master's business and walked down to find an inn near the docks. Dragonfly looked about at the sights of the city in a silence that might have been awe or disapproval or mere stolidity. "This is a nice little town," Ivory said, "but the only city in the world is Havnor." "A cigarette. What -- you don't smoke?" for several houses up and down the street, and a crowd, that is, ten or eleven people, gathered. his eyes on that seed of light.
